19th Century Danish Gray Painted Oak Cabinet on Legs with Interior Drawers

19th century Danish cabinet crafted in oak and raised on tapered fluted legs with a curved stretcher base.

Decorative details include dentil carved molding along the upper crown and midsection, latticework along the upper crown, and vertical fluted carving on the panel doors.

The cabinet doors open to reveal interior shelving along with seven petite drawers. An upper curved half shelf is notched, originally used to display family sterling silver spoons.

The cabinet has been finished in a newer professionally applied layered gray painted finish with undertones of pale teal and antique white. The interior presents in a blue-gray tone.

The cabinet has been restored and is strong, stable, and ready to use. The original lock functions with the included key. Age-related cracks, minor separations, and wear are visible along trim, sides, and throughout, consistent with the period. The back shows typical separation of oak planks and cracks.
