18th Century Black Painted Oak Rococo Chest of Drawers from Denmark

The black painted finish is striking in this attractive large oak chest of four drawers resting on scalloped skirt and straight-lined feet.

While the paint is newer and professionally applied, it complements the age, rococo style and serpentine curves of this chest that dates back to the late 1700's.

The layered black painted finish has been distressed, creating aged character while revealing the natural wood below. Each drawer had two brass pulls.

This strong and elegant oak dresser has been restored and is ready for use. Drawer bottoms and sides were constructed in pine, typical of the craftsmanship of this era. All scratches, cracks (top and sides), dings, and age-related separation (drawer bottoms and back) are reflective of age and do not detract from the beauty nor function of this large chest of four drawers. A couple of the drawer bottoms show old repairs to cover the separation of planks, some signs of old dried and inactive worm holes also seen in drawer bottoms (which do not impact function).
