19th Century Swedish Original Blue Painted Pine Corner Cabinet Cupboard

19th century Swedish corner cupboard crafted in pine, retaining its original blue painted finish with traditional folk-art decoration. The deeply distressed painted surface reveals areas of natural pine beneath, while contrasting dark red trim accents the crown, midsection, and lower skirt.

The paneled doors feature decorative faux blue marble painting, a traditional technique used in Swedish country furniture. Traces of green paint remain along portions of the panels, adding further depth to the layered original finish.

The cupboard is arranged with two upper cabinet doors above a single lower door, providing versatile, enclosed storage within a space-saving corner design. Constructed in one section, the cabinet retains its traditional country proportions and decorative character.

The upper doors open using an old key as a pull only, as the lock is no longer functional. The upper left door is held in place by its original interior metal latch. Inside, the painted finish is a newer white-gray color with residual red throughout. Cracks and holes are visible along the interior back, particularly in the upper left section.

The lower cabinet door opens with a brass pull and snaps into place when closed. Its interior retains a distressed greenish-gray painted surface that appears to have been applied later than the original exterior finish. Generations of use are evident in cracks along the paneled doors, scratches, nicks, and considerable distress to the original paint. Age related separation is visible along the upper right paneled door, with additional signs of wear throughout. Restored, stable, and ready to use. A charming example of Swedish country craftsmanship, combining original painted folk-art decoration with practical corner storage.
