Early 19th Century French Bleached Oak Sideboard Buffet

Early 19th century French sideboard crafted in oak with a bleached finish that highlights the natural grain and traditional carved details. Two paneled cabinet doors flank a central arrangement of four drawers, creating a balanced and practical storage piece with classic French country appeal.

Decorative carving accents the cabinet doors and gently curved front corners of the buffet. A scalloped lower skirt and curved carved feet complete the elegant silhouette. The cabinet doors open using functioning locks and keys, revealing interior shelving of newer construction. The upper central drawer uses a key as a pull only, while the three lower drawers open with brass pulls.

Age related movement has caused a minor gap at the upper edge of the right cabinet door, although both doors remain in place. The top displays multiple cracks, old stains, and two earlier repairs that appear as square wood inserts near the front left and right corners. Slight bowing visible along the top.

Additional age related separation is visible along both sides and within the lower cabinet interiors. Cracking and old repairs can also be seen along the carved right front corner. Scratches, nicks, dings, and small areas of missing wood reflect generations of use. Please examine the rear photographs for details of the back feet.

Restored, stable, and ready to use. A versatile French oak buffet with practical enclosed storage, four drawers, and an appealing light bleached finish.

Please refer to professional photos for clear understanding of color, condition, and
