Late 18th Century Swedish Black Painted Wedding Cabinet with Four-Drawer Bombay Chest

Impressive late 18th century Swedish wedding cabinet crafted in pine, combining a tall upper cupboard with a Bombay-form chest of four drawers below. A dramatic, heavily carved crown gives the cabinet an architectural presence, while the scalloped lower skirt and curved drawer fronts enhance its traditional Scandinavian character.

The black painted exterior has been scraped and distressed to reveal areas of natural pine beneath. Two large upper doors open using the original functioning lock and key. Inside, contrasting (possibly newer) blue paint is heavily distressed, exposing the pine below. The interior includes three standard shelves, three slender drawers, and two graduated curved upper shelves with notched edges, originally designed for displaying family silver and serving utensils.

The lower bombe chest contains two shorter drawers above two longer drawers, each opening with brass pulls. An additional key is included as a decorative accent only and does not operate the lower drawers.

More than two centuries of use are evident in cracks along the doors and sides, as well as age related separation between planks along the back and drawer bottoms. A slight gap between the upper doors is visible when viewed from the far left but is not readily apparent from directly in front. Additional nicks, scratches, and distress are consistent with the cabinet's age.

Restored, strong, stable, and ready to use. A substantial Swedish country cabinet offering decorative carving, original painted character, and generous storage.
