18th Century Rustic Spanish Baroque Writing or Dining Table with Iron Stretcher

18th century Spanish Baroque style writing or dining table, featuring a substantial wooden top supported by decorative carved legs in a harp or lyre form. An iron stretcher connects the supports, adding a traditional structural and decorative element to the rustic design.
The tabletop is constructed from three wide planks, each displaying its own variation in color, grain, and patina. The resulting surface has a richly aged appearance that reflects centuries of use and gives the table its distinctive character.
Considerable wear is visible throughout, including scratches, gouges, old cracks, and earlier repairs across the top. The carved legs also display cracks, nicks, and pronounced wear, particularly around the feet. These imperfections are an important part of the table's rustic appearance and reflect its long history.
Restored, stable, and ready to use. With its carved lyre-form supports, iron stretcher, and heavily distressed wooden surface, this Spanish table would make a distinctive writing desk, dining table, or statement piece in a rustic interior.
