Early 19th Century Danish Gray Painted Oak Rococo Secretary Bureau

Early 19th century Danish Rococo secretary of smaller scale, crafted primarily in oak with pine also used in its traditional construction. A newer light gray painted finish with antique white undertones has been lightly distressed to complement the age and character of the bureau. The interior is painted a contrasting blue with white speckling and subtle tonal variation. The drop-front writing surface opens to rest on extending support arms, creating a functional desktop. Behind it, seven small drawers and additional petite cubby compartments provide organized storage for correspondence, writing materials, and other belongings.

Three larger drawers below offer additional storage, each fitted with two brass ring pulls. The old locks no longer function, and the keys are used as pulls only. The back was replaced at an earlier point in the bureau's history.

Age related separation between planks and cracking are visible within the larger drawers, consistent with the construction and age of the piece. Additional small cracks, nicks, scratches, and minor separation at corners and joined sections of wood are present throughout. Visible distress along upper edge of back.

Restored, stable, and ready to use. This compact Danish secretary combines Rococo curves, a softly distressed gray finish, and a contrasting blue writing interior with practical drawer storage.
