19th Century Swedish Mora Grandfather Clock with Original Blue Painted Long Case

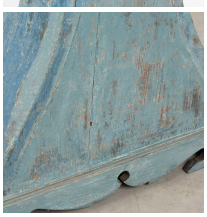

19th century Swedish Mora grandfather clock with a tall pine longcase retaining its original blue painted finish. The surface has been carefully scraped to reveal layers of aged paint in darker blue, lighter blue, and gray-blue tones, creating a beautifully weathered example of traditional Scandinavian country craftsmanship.

A decorative carved wooden lattice crowns the clock above its old face with black numerals. Only one original clock hand remains. The rounded belly features a glass opening surrounded by the faint remnants of an original hand-painted floral garland, adding a delicate decorative detail to the sculptural longcase.

The original painted surface displays variations in tone that may appear different depending on lighting. Professional photography can make the blues appear lighter than they would in ordinary interior lighting, where the finish may look somewhat deeper or darker.

Age related separation between the two planks forming the back is visible and should not be mistaken for damage from a single crack. Additional cracks are present along the front, right, and left sides of the base, with smaller cracks, gouges, and separations throughout the case.

The wooden longcase has been restored and is stable and ready for placement. The original clock mechanism is not functioning, and the clock is offered primarily as a decorative antique. Any original clockworks can accompany the piece for a buyer interested in restoration. Alternatively, a modern battery-operated mechanism may be installed by buyer upon arrival for convenient everyday timekeeping.

A distinctive Swedish Mora clock with an authentic layered blue finish, traditional carved decoration, and the graceful proportions of Scandinavian country furniture.
